II. Visit of the Security Council to Uganda

A. Background and context

2. On 6 October 2010, the members of the Security Council met with President Yoweri Kaguta Museveni in Entebbe. The purpose of the visit was to reiterate the appreciation of the Council for, and to support the invaluable contribution of Uganda to, the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM); to express its encouragement regarding the improvement of relations among the countries of the region and increased regional cooperation in addressing the security challenges posed by the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA); and to discuss the status of the implementation of the Sudan's Comprehensive Peace Agreement, including the holding of the 9 January 2011 referendums in Southern Sudan and Abyei.

3. The members of the Security Council visited the United Nations Entebbe Support Base and were briefed on the progress made with regard to expanding the base into a regional logistic hub and on measures taken to better streamline existing resources.

B. Meeting with the President of Uganda

4. President Museveni stated that the two most urgent issues facing the region were the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and terrorism in Somalia. The President and the members of the Security Council stressed the importance of all parties respecting the full implementation of the Agreement, in particular the holding of peaceful, transparent and credible referendums in Southern Sudan and Abyei on 9 January 2010.

5. The President deemed unfounded the fears that the self-determination referendum in Southern Sudan could create a precedent and cause a domino effect in other parts of the continent, noting that the referendum was an integral provision of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. The President said that the high-level meeting on the Sudan in New York on 24 September had reassured him that there was still strong support within the international community for the timely and peaceful holding of the referendum in Southern Sudan.

6. The President and the Security Council delegation agreed that the deployment of United Nations and other international observers throughout the referendum process would increase the transparency and credibility of the referendum and facilitate the acceptance of its outcome.

7. The members of the Security Council delegation reiterated their commitment to support the full implementation of the Agreement, including the holding of peaceful, transparent and credible referendums in Southern Sudan and Abyei on 9 January. They agreed with the President that there was an urgent need to strengthen the capacity of institutions in the South, especially if the referendum led to the transformation of Southern Sudan into a sovereign country.

8. With regard to the situation in Somalia, President Museveni stated that security and stability in Somalia were achievable, if the international community provided the requisite support to the Transitional Federal Government and AMISOM to stabilize the country. The African Union, he said, would continue to support the Djibouti peace process because it was a political process agreed upon by the Somali people. The President remained confident that the threat of Al-Shabaab could be definitively eliminated, as AMISOM had demonstrated by rendering the terrorist group incapable of toppling the Transitional Federal Government.

9. In the same context, the President stressed that Uganda and other African countries were in a position to mobilize as many troops as necessary, that they were committed to doing so in the shortest possible amount of time and that increased logistical and financial support to AMISOM from the United Nations, the European Union or other entities was urgently needed. The President suggested emulating the formula used in East Timor and Burundi, in which Australia and South Africa, respectively, had deployed the bulk of the troops, with the support of additional contingents from other countries.

10. In addition, the President recommended that countries whose military vessels and aircraft carriers were currently deployed off the coast of Somalia should consider establishing and enforcing both a no-fly zone and a maritime blockade in order to limit the movement of terrorist groups and the flow of weapons.

11. Concerning LRA, the President stated that LRA was not a long-term problem, since countries in the region were now working closely together. He called on the international community, and the United Nations in particular, to support regional efforts. In the same context, the President requested flexibility in some United Nations procedures regarding deployment of and support to non-United Nations troops, stating that, during the military operations against LRA, helicopters from the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) could not be used on weekends.

12. The Security Council delegation reiterated its sincere appreciation for the generous support provided by the Ugandan authorities, including additional space for the transition of the Entebbe Support Base into a regional logistical support base.

C. Visit to the Entebbe Support Base

13. The Director of Mission Support of the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO) briefed Security Council members on the progress of the Entebbe Support Base in expanding into a regional logistics hub, noting that additional space would enable the expansion of the facilities and more efficiently support neighbouring peacekeeping missions.

14. Security Council members were also briefed on progress aimed at establishing a full-fledged regional service centre designed to provide various types of support to United Nations entities in the region through service-level agreements. In specific cases, with the approval of the relevant United Nations legislative bodies and the signing of a service-level agreement, similar services might be provided to non-United Nations entities such as African peacekeeping missions.

III. Visit of the Security Council to the Sudan

A. Background and context

15. The Security Council visited the Sudan in order to reaffirm the commitment of the international community to and its support for the full and timely implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and to encourage a peaceful, comprehensive and inclusive resolution for the situation in Darfur. The Council urged cooperation between the National Congress Party and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement on the referendums for Southern Sudan and Abyei and in resolving the outstanding issues related to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, including the successful completion of border demarcation and negotiations on post-referendum arrangements. The Council also emphasized the importance of the partnership between the United Nations and the African Union in support of the Sudanese peace processes.

16. The visit of the Security Council was also undertaken to reiterate its support for the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) and the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), as well as the work of the African Union-United Nations Joint Chief Mediator, and to assess the assistance provided by UNMIS and UNAMID within their current mandates and capabilities. In that context, the Council underlined its concern for the security of humanitarian aid workers and peacekeepers and reiterated the vital importance of allowing their full, safe and unhindered freedom of movement and access.

17. The Security Council mission to the Sudan took place in the midst of increasing expectations for the referendums to be held on 9 January 2011. On 28 October, the media reported that voter registration for the referendum in the Southern Sudan was to begin on 14 November, according to the Chair of the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission. On the other hand, the Abyei Referendum Commission had not been established, and the parties continued the negotiation to resolve the issue of residency/voter eligibility, a long-standing dispute between the Misseriya nomads and Ngok Dinka residents in Abyei. Referring to the 24 September communiqué issued after the high-level meeting on the Sudan that was chaired by the Secretary-General, the Security Council mission reiterated the responsibility of the parties to conduct credible, peaceful, free referendums on 9 January 2011 that reflected the will of the Sudanese people, and reminded all parties and States of their commitment to respect the outcome of the referendums.

18. In Darfur, the Security Council mission took place in the context of a volatile security situation, including armed clashes between Government forces and rebel forces in Jebel Marra, criminality, kidnapping and attacks on United Nations peacekeepers and civilian personnel. The African Union and the United Nations continue efforts to facilitate the negotiated settlement of the conflict. In the meantime, the Government has released a political and security strategy for Darfur, in which it commits to improving the situation on the ground.

B. Meetings in Juba

Government of Southern Sudan

19. On 6 October, the Security Council mission arrived in Juba and met with First Vice-President Salva Kiir Mayardit and other members of the Government of Southern Sudan. The First Vice-President reaffirmed the commitment of his Government to the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, including the holding of the referendums for Southern Sudan and Abyei on 9 January 2011. He highlighted a number of outstanding issues, including the demarcation of the border of 1 January 1956 between Northern and Southern Sudan, the status of Abyei and the negotiation of post-referendum arrangements, and reiterated that his Government was prepared to accomplish tasks mandated by the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, with the support of the international community. In particular, Vice-President Kiir called on the international community to provide technical, logistical and financial support to the Southern Sudan Referendum

Commission, stating that the Commission had not been able to recruit staff without funding from the Government of National Unity.

20. On border demarcation, First Vice-President Kiir stated that the Sudanese Armed Forces had begun to redeploy across the 1 January 1956 border into Southern Sudan. He proposed the creation of a buffer zone along the border, and called on the United Nations to deploy in the area to prevent possible clashes between the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Sudan People's Liberation Army.

21. With respect to Abyei, First Vice-President Kiir maintained that the ruling of the Permanent Court of Arbitration in July 2009 on Abyei boundaries had reaffirmed the territory of Abyei as areas consisting of nine Ngok Dinka chiefdoms, which had been accepted by both parties, and that there should be no further discussions on the participation of the Misseriya in the Abyei referendum. First Vice-President Kiir shared his concern that the environment to negotiate post-referendum arrangements could change after the referendums, and noted that it would be important for the parties to agree on a framework of continued negotiation, so that discussions could continue regardless of the outcome of the referendums. He called on the international community to facilitate that process.

22. The First Vice-President also noted the lack of development, peacebuilding and reconciliation activities in Southern Sudan. He stated that his Government had offered amnesty to those who had instigated violence after the April elections, while pointing out that armed clashes in Southern Sudan had been exacerbated by the flow of arms from Northern Sudan.

23. The Security Council mission informed First Vice-President Kiir that the international community was united in supporting the full and timely implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, which had been reiterated in the communiqué adopted after the 24 September high-level meeting. The mission also underscored the responsibility of the relevant Sudanese authorities to ensure the safety of peacekeeping and humanitarian personnel and their full freedom of movement. The mission also encouraged the parties to resolve outstanding issues through dialogue, and noted that a unilateral declaration of independence could risk undermining the support of the international community for the process. The mission also underscored that the referendum process must be inclusive, free and fair, in order to allow all voices of the Southern Sudanese to be heard.

24. Members of the Government of Southern Sudan offered their reassurance that United Nations personnel would be protected in Southern Sudan and that the referendum would be conducted in a free and fair environment to ensure that the people of Southern Sudan could express their views, be it unity or secession. In conclusion, the First Vice-President requested the Security Council members to strengthen the mandate of UNMIS, especially with regard to the protection of civilians. He offered assurances that his Government would not resort to a unilateral declaration of independence, but added that, if the National Congress Party refused to cooperate, the internationally monitored referendum could take place without the participation of Northern Sudan.

Southern Sudan Referendum Bureau

25. The Security Council mission met with the Southern Sudan Referendum Bureau in Juba. The chair of the Bureau, who is also the deputy chair of the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission, briefed the mission on the status of preparations for the referendum, noting that state high committees had been established in all 10 states in Southern Sudan and that the Bureau was in the process of identifying locations for country-based referendum centres. He further informed the mission that materials for voter registration were expected to arrive towards the end of October, in time for the commencement of voter registration on 14 November.

26. Members of the Bureau underscored challenges associated with preparations for the referendum, including the difficulty of accessing remote areas, the lack of funds, the short timeline and challenges related to registration and voting in Northern Sudan and overseas, namely in Australia, Canada, Egypt, Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda, the United Kingdom and the United States. Despite these obstacles, they had resolved to hold the referendums on 9 January 2011 and were hopeful that this task could be achieved with the support of the international community. They expressed confidence that voter registration could take place in a relatively short time period owing to the sensitization of voters and the excitement for the referendum. They stressed the importance of the cooperation of the Government of National Unity and the Government of Southern Sudan in meeting that goal.

Civil society

27. The Security Council mission met with leaders from civil society in Southern Sudan, including representatives of church and women's groups. All civil society representatives expressed the need for the Security Council to continue supporting the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement as the basis for peace in the Sudan. Representatives of civil society also emphasized the importance of the free and fair conduct of the referendum and popular consultations, and of the resolution of border demarcation, including in Abyei. Some suggested that there should be an early warning system, with a United Nations monitoring force deployed along the border. One of the representatives shared his concern about threats made by National Congress Party officials to expel southerners from Northern Sudan, should Southern Sudan vote for independence. Others stated that unity was not attractive and that independence was the only option. A representative of women's groups underscored progress being made in Southern Sudan, including with regard to the empowerment of women, and called on the international community to continue supporting development in Southern Sudan.

Training centre of the Southern Sudan Police Service in Rajaf

28. The Security Council mission visited a police training facility in Rajaf, Central Equatoria state, where 5,400 cadets (more than 300 of them female) were receiving training over a period of nine months. The inspector-general welcomed the mission and expressed his gratitude to international partners, such as UNMIS, the United Nations Development Programme and the United States Agency for International Development, for their assistance. The minister of internal affairs expressed his commitment to building a police force that would be able to address internal security challenges. The mission observed demonstrations on high-risk arrest, protection of VIPs and crowd control. The mission also visited classrooms and interacted with trainees who were receiving training in border security and law.

C. Meetings in Darfur

Humanitarian community

29. On 8 October, the Security Council mission met with representatives of humanitarian agencies in El Fasher. The participants underscored challenges associated with freedom of movement and humanitarian access, especially in Jebel Marra, since the beginning of the year. The humanitarian community also noted that armed clashes between the Government and rebels continued to cause displacement and prevent a voluntary and sustainable return of the civilian population. The participants stated that humanitarian capacity had not fully recovered to pre-March 2009 levels in the wake of the expulsion by the Government of Sudan of 13 non-governmental organizations and the closure of various local organizations in March 2009. They also noted that it had been difficult to monitor the humanitarian situation systematically, especially for groups working on human rights and protection issues (e.g., gender-based violence), after the expulsion of the non-governmental organizations. Emphasizing that aid should be delivered impartially, the humanitarian agencies stressed that the cooperation of Sudanese authorities would be essential in order for them to be able to work in all parts of Darfur, including areas not under Government control.

30. The members of the Security Council expressed their deep concern about the upsurge in violence in Darfur, the number of civilian casualties and victims of sexual and gender-based violence, the recruitment of children by armed groups, the flow of illegal arms into Darfur and the continued restrictions on humanitarian access. Members also underlined their concern for the security of civilians, humanitarian aid workers and peacekeepers in Darfur. Some Council members raised the importance of forward planning with respect to issues that involve long-term implications, such as water management and the consequences of climate change.

Wali of Northern Darfur

31. The Governor of Northern Darfur used the meeting with the Security Council mission to present the vision of the Government of the Sudan and provide direct input into the deliberations of the Council on Darfur. The Governor stated that there was no current conflict in North Darfur, and that the security, humanitarian, political and economic situation in Darfur had improved dramatically since the previous visit of the Security Council in 2008. He said that crime was down, primary school enrolment was up and there were ongoing efforts by the Government to address justice and reconciliation at the local level and facilitate the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons. The Governor stated that those developments demonstrated the commitment of the Government to resolving the conflict in Darfur. The Governor stated that the Security Council should put pressure on all rebel groups to join the peace process without preconditions. The Governor further stated that the decision of the International Criminal Court to indict President Bashir had had a negative effect on the peace process, and stressed that Sudan should be treated as an equal member of the United Nations and the international community. The Governor asked the Security Council to maintain unbiased views on the situation and recognize progress being made by the Government with respect thereto, as reflected in its new strategy for Darfur.

32. The Security Council mission expressed its concern about the upsurge in violence in Darfur, including the lack of security for peacekeepers and aid workers, and called on the Government and all relevant parties to ensure freedom of movement and humanitarian access for UNAMID and aid personnel. Some members of the Security Council also stressed that, according to United Nations statistics, violence in Darfur had increased by 240 per cent since the previous year. The mission reiterated its support for the peace process led by the United Nations and the African Union, urged all rebel groups to join the Doha peace process without preconditions or further delay, and called on all parties to make progress towards the immediate cessation of hostilities and a negotiated settlement of the conflict. The mission underscored its support for UNAMID and called on all parties to cooperate with UNAMID in the implementation of its mandate, including the protection of civilians, the facilitation of aid delivery and support for the Doha process. Several members of the mission emphasized the importance of dialogue between the Government and various constituencies in Darfur. Various members highlighted the importance of ensuring accountability for crimes and tackling impunity.

Internally displaced persons: Abu Shouk and Al Salam camps

33. The Security Council mission met with a delegation of internally displaced persons from Abu Shouk and Al Salam camps outside the UNAMID community police centre in Abu Shouk. Representatives of the internally displaced persons, including women and youth, underscored the lack of aid and development in the camps, including the limited provision of food, medical support and educational opportunities. Several representatives spoke about their fear of persecution, referring to reports of assassination and harassment of those who spoke against the Government, and called on UNAMID to fulfil its mandate and provide more robust protection. The representatives of the two camps also emphasized the importance of peace and justice as preconditions for repatriation and development. Some camp representatives voiced their concerns about the attention of the international community shifting to the referendums and other North-South issues, at the expense of peace in Darfur, and urged the implementation of all Security Council resolutions related to Darfur, including resolution 1706 (2006), and an increase in the strength of UNAMID. The Council took note of those serious challenges and offered its reassurance that it was seized of the vital importance of the mandate of UNAMID, giving priority to the protection of civilians and the facilitation of aid delivery, as well as to the support of UNAMID for the Doha process, while calling on all parties, including central and local authorities, to ensure the safety and security of all citizens and respect their rights.

El Fasher Specialist Hospital for Maternity

34. The Security Council mission visited a hospital in El Fasher. The hospital provides medical services to women and newborn children, working with UNAMID and United Nations agencies, receiving close to 4,000 patients and conducting up to 500 operations a month. Council members discussed the various challenges facing the hospital, such as the scourge of sexual violence against women, the problem of fistula for many young women and the lack of medical supplies and training.

D. Meetings in Khartoum

Popular consultations

35. On 9 October, the Security Council mission met with the Governor of Blue Nile state, the Speaker of the Blue Nile State Assembly, the Deputy Governor of Southern Kordofan state, and the Speaker of the Southern Kordofan State Assembly in Khartoum. The Council reiterated its support for the popular consultations as an integral part of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and underscored the importance of inclusive, timely and credible popular consultations processes in Blue Nile and Southern Kordofan states.

36. The Governor of Blue Nile state noted that the popular consultations process provided a “win-win” situation, whereby the people of the two states could express their views on the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and rectify its shortcomings through negotiations with the central Government. The Governor warned that the process could have far-reaching security implications, given the linkage between Blue Nile state, Southern Kordofan state, Abyei and Southern Sudan, and emphasized that it would be important to manage the popular consultations process carefully.

37. In response to questions posed by the mission regarding the mechanisms and processes of the popular consultations, the representatives of Blue Nile state clarified that consultations with political parties, civil society groups and citizens would be held through seminars, workshops and other forums, after which the State Assembly would finalize a report, to be submitted to the central Government. In Southern Kordofan state, the process had been delayed as a result of the postponement of the elections. In both states, issues related to autonomy, power- and wealth-sharing and cultural and religious rights were likely to be major concerns. Both state representatives called on the international community to provide technical and financial support, especially in the light of the short time frame in which to conclude the popular consultations processes.

Southern Sudan Referendum Commission

38. The Chair of the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission, Muhammad Ibrahim Khalil, informed the Security Council mission of various challenges related to meeting the deadline of 9 January 2011. The Chair stated that the referendum calendar had not been finalized, but that he was proposing a one-week registration period, from 14 to 21 November. He stated that the Juba-based Southern Sudan Referendum Bureau had already informed key constituencies that voter registration would begin on 14 November and would last for three weeks. He also noted that the Government had not disbursed any funding for the Commission, including salaries for the Commission’s staff members. At the end of his briefing, the Chair emphasized that the referendum was a Sudanese exercise, with only supplementary assistance from the international community.

39. Members of the Security Council noted that sufficient time should be allocated for voter registration in order to ensure the credibility of the referendum. The Chair emphasized that the timeline for the registration and post-registration periods would have to be condensed in order to abide by the timetable indicated in the Referendum Act and still meet the deadline of 9 January 2011. The Chair further stated that, if the date for the referendum remained 9 January 2011, there might not be enough time for voters to register and challenge the voter registry list in a transparent and accountable manner, which could put the credibility of the process at risk. The Council mission recalled that both parties had recommitted themselves to holding the referendum on time, and urged the Chair to seek flexibility in the timetable of the Referendum Act. In response to a question on the design of the ballot paper, the Chair stated that the Commission had not yet discussed what the question on the ballot would be or how it would be depicted for illiterate voters, as the Commission was preoccupied with preparations for voter registration.

Minister for foreign affairs

40. The mission met with Foreign Minister Ali Karti and other members of the Government of National Unity in Khartoum. Mr. Karti stated that the current Government had ended the war that it had inherited and had succeeded in restoring peace and stability and addressing the root causes of the conflict, even if that meant that Southern Sudan would have the option of secession. He further stated that the Government had already implemented the three key areas of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement: power-sharing, wealth-sharing and the status of Abyei, Southern Kordofan state and Blue Nile state, while the Sudan People's Liberation Army had only partially withdrawn from the ceasefire zone.

41. Mr. Karti reaffirmed that the Government was committed to holding the referendums on 9 January 2011, as evidenced by the decision to breach referendum law, specifically the provision that registration must be completed 90 days before the referendums, in order to meet the 9 January date. He informed the mission that referendum preparations had to be carried out correctly by the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission, without any outside intervention, and that this would be the only precondition for the outcome to be recognized. He also noted that some of the post-referendum issues should be agreed upon, including border demarcation, citizenship and wealth-sharing, before the referendums, but that they were not preconditions for holding the referendums. Mr. Karti emphasized that the Government did not want a resumption of the war and stated that the Security Council should be concerned about the statements being made that suggested the possibility of a unilateral declaration of independence.

42. With respect to Darfur, Mr. Karti observed that, while the international community had supported various peace initiatives, it had never imposed sanctions on the rebel groups that had breached peace agreements. Mr. Karti emphasized that Doha remained the fundamental negotiating forum for the Government and called on the international community to pressure rebel groups outside the Doha talks into joining the talks without preconditions.

43. Mr. Karti commended the level of cooperation between the Government and UNAMID and referred to the Government's new strategy for Darfur, which included a proposal to monitor security incidents with UNAMID. Mr. Karti denounced attacks against UNAMID personnel committed by the rebels and their splinter groups armed by external actors, and stated that some of those armed groups also operated inside camps for internally displaced persons. Another Government representative indicated that the Government intended to take disciplinary measures against those armed elements.

44. Mr. Karti stated that sanctions against the Sudan were unjustified and harmed civilians. He also noted that it would be important to maintain a balance between justice and peace, with one not coming at the detriment of the other.

45. Referring to the 24 September communiqué and the terms of reference for the Security Council mission, members of the Council reiterated their support for the full and timely implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. Various Council members emphasized that the parties must exercise flexibility in ensuring that the referendums took place on time, and called on the Government to provide all necessary resources, including funding, for the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission. Council members also expressed deep concern with the delay in the establishment of the Abyei Commission and called on the parties to resolve the outstanding issues through negotiations, including those taking place in Addis Ababa. The Council mission also emphasized that it would be essential to address key post-referendum issues, including citizenship, oil and border management. The delegation also raised the issue of humanitarian access in Darfur and called on the Government and all relevant parties to ensure freedom of movement for aid workers and peacekeepers.

46. Mr. Karti responded by attributing some of the challenges to the lack of cooperation from the Sudan People's Liberation Movement and clarifying that the referendums were to reflect the will of the people, not the opinions of the Government of Southern Sudan or the Sudan People's Liberation Movement. Mr. Karti welcomed the appointment of the panel of the Secretary-General to monitor the referendums process and encouraged international observation missions to work with the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission. Mr. Karti also stated that the July 2009 ruling by the Permanent Court of Arbitration was limited to the boundaries of Abyei and that it was not up to the Court to decide other issues, including the definition of residency. With respect to funding for the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission, the minister of finance clarified that the Government was prepared to support the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission but that the budget had not been submitted by the Commission. The Commissioner of the Humanitarian Aid Commission denied that aid agencies faced restrictions on movements, including in Jebel Marra, and informed the mission that the Sudanese Armed Forces were in control of most areas in Darfur, except for some areas where the Justice and Equality Movement was present. Mr. Karti and other members of the Government emphasized that the Government had taken the initiative to develop the strategy for Darfur, which demonstrated its commitment to peace and stability throughout the Sudan.

Vice-President of the Government of National Unity

47. Vice-President Ali Osman Taha reassured the Security Council mission that the Government was fully committed to the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and to peace and stability in Darfur. Vice-President Taha noted that, while the Government was engaged in the negotiation of post-referendum arrangements, other critical issues remained unresolved, including the demarcation of the 1956 border, where there had been a build up of force. In response to a question posed by the Security Council mission, Vice-President Taha clarified that those pending issues were not preconditions for the holding of the referendums.

48. Vice-President Taha also underscored the need to pressure the rebel groups to join the Darfur peace process and underlined the efforts of the Government to address impunity, including through the establishment of domestic mechanisms. Vice-President Taha asked the Council to recognize tangible progress made by the Government to improve the situation in Darfur, stating that negative attitudes from the international community would lead to negative consequences, undermining the Government and encouraging the rebels to continue acting as spoilers. He also noted the high level of cooperation between the Government and UNAMID on the ground, and expressed the appreciation of his Government for the work of UNAMID and United Nations agencies.

International humanitarian community

49. Representatives of humanitarian agencies raised various concerns, including security challenges, the denial of access and other bureaucratic impediments. They emphasized the need to reach the whole population in order to identify priorities based on needs, and acknowledged the importance of open dialogue with the Government. In response to the questions asked by some members of the Security Council on the impact of the expulsion of 13 non-governmental organizations in March 2009, representatives of humanitarian agencies noted that there had been no delivery of services in certain parts of Darfur since the expulsion, and that the quality of services had also been compromised, particularly with regard to protection, food and health. On the question of child soldiers, the humanitarian agencies noted that significant numbers of child soldiers were associated with armed groups other than the two parties and that the majority of the youth lacked employment or educational opportunities. The humanitarian agencies were in the process of developing a contingency plan for the post-referendum period in order to ensure the continued delivery of humanitarian and development assistance. The Security Council mission expressed its appreciation for the efforts of the humanitarian community in Sudan and expressed its willingness to continue facilitating that important work.

Southern Sudanese in Northern Sudan

50. Members of the Security Council mission met with representatives of Southern Sudanese residing in Northern Sudan. Several participants observed an increase in hostile rhetoric by both unity supporters and those who favoured separation. Many noted that the Southern Sudanese in Northern Sudan were fearful of a potential violent backlash, especially during the referendums or after the results are announced. Another representative informed the mission that the Southern Sudanese would continue to fear for a delay or cancellation of the referendums until the day of the voting, and called on the Security Council to continue pressuring the parties to hold the referendums on time.

51. Several representatives of the Southern Sudanese in Northern Sudan informed the mission of the population migration from Northern Sudan to Southern Sudan in anticipation of the referendums, and shared their concerns about the possible outbreak of hostilities along the border. A female representative of Southern Sudanese internally displaced persons stated that many such persons had not participated in the repatriation programme sponsored by the Government of Southern Sudan out of concern for the loss of educational opportunities for their children, who had been schooled in Northern Sudan. Another representative of the internally displaced persons noted that those who had migrated to Northern Sudan for economic reasons well before the war were more likely to vote for unity, while those who had come to Northern Sudan to escape violence during the war would likely support secession.

52. All participants were concerned about potential harassment, intimidation and fraud during registration and voting in Northern Sudan. They also noted the risk of losing their properties in Northern Sudan if they registered in Southern Sudan. They called on UNMIS to monitor the situation closely and to provide protection as required.
