Annex*Statement by the Permanent Representative of Afghanistan to the United Nations on the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Afghanistan (S/2015/336), made at the 55th formal meeting of the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict*6 July 2015

I would like to thank Malaysia for its chairmanship of the Working Group and for the opportunity to be present here today. I would also like to thank the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, Leila Zerrougui, for her remarks, as well as her tireless efforts and stewardship in promoting children's rights all over the world, especially in my country. We have taken note of the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Afghanistan and welcome the recommendations contained therein.

In the reporting period, between September 2010 and December 2014, Afghanistan has undergone major changes. 2014 was an exceptionally important year; as the international community was preparing to withdraw its forces, the Afghan Security and Defence Forces assumed full responsibility for providing security all over the country. Since then, armed enemies of Afghanistan have spared no effort in terrorizing the Afghan people and destabilizing the country. Joined by thousands of foreign terrorist fighters across the border, they have increased ground engagements and complex attacks on homes, markets, schools, mosques and critical infrastructure. By indiscriminately attacking civilian spaces, the Taliban and other terrorist groups have continued to kill and terrorize the Afghan people. This has resulted in the deaths of and injuries to over 10,000 civilians in 2014, with a 48 per cent increase in child casualties, and this terror campaign continues incrementally to this day.

An entire generation of children has grown up amid the conflict in Afghanistan. The violence in Afghanistan has resulted in a situation in which children are extremely vulnerable to exploitation by violent extremist groups. By brutally attacking schools, teaching staff and students, in particular women and girls seeking an education, the Taliban and other terrorist groups seek to hinder children's access to education and make them more vulnerable to exploitation. Children have been used by the Taliban and other terrorist groups for multiple purposes; they have been forced to act as informers, spies, human shields, foot soldiers, active combatants and even suicide bombers. Children are preferred by these violent groups because they are readily available, cheap and useful, can be manipulated and terrorized and are often willing to accept the most dangerous assignments because they lack a full understanding of their own mortality. These violent attacks, coupled with poverty and unemployment, lead to children often trying to join the security forces by falsifying their age and identification.

Keeping in mind the challenges of reconstruction in a post-conflict society, my Government has taken major steps to protect our children, who are the future of our nation. These include the comprehensive implementation and monitoring of the children and armed conflict action plan and its 15-point road map. In a measure considered a milestone, the Government of Afghanistan enacted a law prohibiting underage recruitment in security forces, which was ratified earlier this year. It also developed unified verification guidelines for all security institutions to prevent underage recruitment. As a result of these significant changes, several hundred underage applicants attempting to enlist in security forces were rejected in 2014. The Government has also included children's rights in the curriculum of the security forces, which is a very important step to educate and sensitize the army and the police about the inalienable rights of the child.

We have also put in place a series of measures to raise public awareness through the establishment of dozens of community-based school protection councils in provinces and by convening various seminars and workshops to train religious scholars, teachers, elders and students on the rights of children, with the support of the international community. The Afghan Government is strong in its commitment to protect our children from extremist forces as well as internal turmoil; hence we are rigidly enforcing these child protection programmes and making sure that there is awareness in the communities about best practices. While the Taliban and foreign fighters are systematically committing atrocities against civilians and children, this report should take into account the harsh realities of Afghanistan — we are dealing with violent extremist groups and terrorists and, despite the Government's attempts at peace and reconciliation, the extremists are not open to that approach. It is important to note that most of these terrorist groups are under Security Council sanctions. The Government has made every effort to ensure its forces' compatibility with international standards of operations, which includes reviewing tactics and procedures for conducting operations highly focused on the protection of civilians as the ultimate goal; putting an absolute end to underage recruitment among its forces is also a core principle that the country abides by.

As suggested by the Secretary-General, the Government of Afghanistan is strongly committed to fulfilling its moral imperative and legal obligation in protecting children's rights in all circumstances. To this end, the Government of Afghanistan will continue its full cooperation with the Working Group and all relevant bodies of the United Nations, including the country task force, to ensure the full implementation of the action plan and all relevant Security Council resolutions concerning the protection of children. In conclusion, I want to emphasize the importance of providing a secure environment for our children. A few days back, in a gathering organized by civil society for children in Paktika Province, children desperately called for peace and security, beseeched the leaders to send them books instead of guns and, in a symbolic gesture, broke plastic guns. As Afghanistan moves towards a new era of reformation, we are committed to providing a stable and peaceful future for our children.
