Report of the Security Council mission to Haiti (11 to 14 March 2009)

I. Introduction

1. In a letter dated 3 February 2009, the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that the members of the Council had decided to send a mission to Haiti from 11 to 14 March, which would be led by Jorge Urbina of Costa Rica. Following consultations among the members of the Council, it was agreed that the composition of the mission should be as follows (see S/2009/139):

France	(Jean-Pierre Lacroix, Deputy Permanent Representative)
Japan	(Yukio Takasu, Permanent Representative)
Libyan Arab Jamahiriya	(Esam Ganbour, Counsellor)

2. The terms of reference of the mission, which were agreed on 20 February 2009 and its programme of work are contained in the annexes to the present report.

3. The mission constituted a clear demonstration of the commitment of the Security Council to the stability of Haiti and an opportunity to call for immediate responses and long-term solutions to the challenges facing Haiti. The challenges include the following areas: security, political dialogue and elections, extension of State authority, rule of law and human rights, humanitarian relief and socio-economic development.

4. The mission left New York on 11 March and returned on 14 March. This was the second visit of the Security Council to Haiti, the previous one having been in 2005. The mission met with the President of Haiti, René García Prével; Prime Minister Michèle Duvivier Pierre-Louis and a number of her ministers; the coordinator of the presidential commissions and the Chairman of the Presidential Commission on the Constitution; the President of the Senate and the President of the Chamber of Deputies; the President, the Treasurer and the Director-General of the Provisional Electoral Council, the Minister of Justice and Public Security, the Secretaries of State for Public Security and Justice and the Director-General of the Haitian National Police; leaders of the political parties; and representatives of the private sector and civil society. The mission also met with senior officials of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH); the United Nations country team; and members of the Core Group established by the Security Council pursuant to resolution 1542 (2004). The mission attended the inauguration of the School for Magistrates, visited the Cité Soleil area of Port-au-Prince, Fort Liberté, the town of Ouanaminthe, on the border with the Dominican Republic, and the city of Gonaïves. The mission also visited various MINUSTAH military and police installations, including the military base at Camp Charlie, the maritime base in Fort Liberté and the Chinese formed police unit in Cité Soleil.

5. The mission expressed its gratitude for the hospitality and openness of the Haitian authorities. It was also grateful to the Permanent Representative of Haiti, Léo Mérorès, for having accompanied the mission and for his contribution to its success. The mission recognized the impeccable organization and close coordination in preparation for the visit carried out by the Secretariat, especially the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Hédi Annabi, MINUSTAH and the United Nations country team. The mission also expressed its gratitude to the United Nations Department of Safety and Security for its professionalism in safeguarding the mission.

II. Key issues

Overall security situation

6. The mission found that significant progress has been made on the security front due to the role played by MINUSTAH and the gradual strengthening of the Haitian National Police. The Security Council found solid progress in establishing a healthy police/population ratio of 1.366 police officers per 1,000 inhabitants. The original number of Haitian National Police serving at the time of the deployment of MINUSTAH, 3,000 members, has now tripled. In addition, recruitment and vetting are being carried out successfully. MINUSTAH has made a decisive contribution, together with the Haitian National Police, to the dismantling of armed gangs responsible for much of the violence in the country. This has led to a significant decline in criminal activities, in particular kidnappings, which had previously undermined public confidence.

7. Several developments have affected the overall security situation, which remains fragile in Haiti. The country has suffered serious setbacks due to the combined effects of the food crisis, the global financial and economic crisis and the devastating impact of the 2008 hurricane season, which has had an adverse effect on the socio-economic situation, undermining the sustainability of security in Haiti. Persistent poverty and youth unemployment in urban areas have created an environment that is vulnerable to civil unrest and, possibly, renewed gang activity. Instances of civil unrest involving violence have increased since December 2008, with 64 demonstrations reported in February 2009, two thirds of which were motivated by socio-economic concerns. In addition, the upcoming elections for the renewal of one third of the Senate, the first round of which is slated for 19 April 2009, could provide a context for tension and potential protest.

8. The mission heard expressions of serious concern about the impact of drug trafficking, which was described as one of the most destabilizing factors facing the country currently, and its corruptive influence in Haiti. In this regard, members of the Council fully agreed with the view expressed by several key Haitian and international interlocutors that if serious steps are not taken to address the problem of drug trafficking, the country's stability will continue to be threatened.

9. The lack of capacity of the Haitian State to control its land and maritime borders, which contributes to the ongoing illegal activity, was found to be a major cause for concern. In this regard, the mission welcomed the start of maritime patrolling by MINUSTAH military and police and the Haitian National Police using the MINUSTAH patrol boats located at Port Salut, Killick and Fort Liberté, as well as joint integrated border patrol operations, drawing on land, air and maritime capabilities. The members of the Council recognized, however, that those activities would need to be complemented through bilateral initiatives and cooperation, particularly from countries in the region, since MINUSTAH has neither the mandate nor the capability to effectively conduct interdiction operations, and Haitian capability to assume these responsibilities has yet to be developed.

10. The mission was of the view that the continued presence of MINUSTAH troops and police remains critical to the maintenance of a secure and stable environment, pending further progress in developing the capacity of Haitian authorities to maintain security and public order without external assistance. Thought and major efforts will need to be given to a progressive transfer of responsibility to the Haitian authorities during the process. The mission also took note of the view expressed by several Haitian and international interlocutors that it would be ill-advised for MINUSTAH to withdraw its forces from Haiti too soon, that is, not until it became clear that Haiti was in a position to deal with the array of security threats facing the country. The importance of the long-term training and professionalization of the Haitian National Police in order to develop Haiti's ability to provide for its own security was also stressed by Haitian and international interlocutors alike.

11. The acknowledgement that the Haitian National Police alone cannot be expected to fight the illegal arms trade and drug trafficking has prompted calls in some quarters for the Haitian National Police to be supplemented by a security force capable of assuming the full range of tasks currently being conducted by the Haitian National Police supported by MINUSTAH. In that regard, the Presidential Commission to reflect on the strengthening of security is expected to issue its report with recommendations on the issue in the near future.

12. A number of interlocutors expressed concern that weapons continue to circulate in Haiti. In that regard, the mission found that the MINUSTAH community violence reduction programme continues to play a valuable role in providing advice to the national commission on disarmament, dismantlement and reinsertion, focusing on key areas of the country affected by violence. The programme's labour-intensive projects, which aim to discourage participation in gangs and to rehabilitate former gang members, are also critical to improving the overall security environment.

Political dialogue and elections

13. The mission found it encouraging that the political climate had improved considerably following the establishment of an elected Government in 2006. In that regard, several political actors, including leaders of the opposition, acknowledged that during President Préval's term in office the press has enjoyed unprecedented freedom and that members of the opposition have been free to express their opinion without fear of persecution.

14. Despite those positive developments, the stability of Haiti's fledgling democratic institutions continues to be undermined by deep divisions within Haitian society and ongoing political tensions between contending factions. The mission was particularly concerned by the fact that despite signs of a renewed spirit of cooperation prompted by the devastation wrought by last year's storms and hurricanes, relations between the executive branch and the Parliament remain fraught, as demonstrated by continued Parliamentary summons of Government ministers, the inability to reach agreement so far on the budget for the period 2008-2009 and the modest progress to date on implementing the joint legislative agenda adopted in December 2008.

15. The President and magistrates of the Provisional Electoral Council told members of the Council that eight electoral processes will be spread out over the next 36 months. The mission also received information on logistical support provided by MINUSTAH to the Provisional Electoral Council and on the security assistance provided.

16. The onset of elections for the renewal of one third of the Senate, the first round of which is scheduled to take place next 19 April, has created further political uncertainty. The decision taken by the Provisional Electoral Council not to accept any of the candidates put forward by contending factions of Fanmi Lavalas, the party of former President Jean Bertrand Aristide, has raised questions about the inclusiveness of the upcoming senatorial elections. The mission was encouraged by the commitment of Fanmi Lavalas leaders to use only legal means at their disposal to seek a reversal of the Provisional Electoral Council decision. Some political and civil society representatives stressed the potential for renewed social unrest. The mission emphasized to the Provisional Electoral Council that everything possible must be done to deal with the perception of exclusion that could be felt in sectors of the population because of the non-participation of an important political group. The current situation has further highlighted the need to review the electoral system and strengthen political parties.

17. The mission was informed that several political parties have decided to opt out of the elections due, in part, to their own financial difficulties and a lack of confidence in the ability of the Provisional Electoral Council to organize the elections on time. The Provisional Electoral Council reassured the mission of its commitment to ensure that free, fair and inclusive elections be held on time. However, a number of interlocutors expressed doubts whether other elections scheduled in 2009 for the second third of the Senate, the entire Chamber of Deputies and local authorities, all of which are scheduled to take place in 2009, would be held on time.

18. The mission also found encouraging signs of a genuine willingness on the part of the Government of Haiti, Parliament, political parties, the private sector and civil society to engage in a constructive dialogue on issues of critical importance to the future of the country. The recent establishment by President Préval of commissions on education, competitiveness, information technology, the security forces and constitutional reform, involving a broad range of stakeholders from across the political and social spectrum, constitutes a positive step towards fostering dialogue and consensus. However, it is vital for those commissions to produce concrete results in order to restore public confidence in the political process.

19. The issue of constitutional reform was discussed with a wide range of interlocutors. In that regard, there appears to be a broad recognition among Haiti's leadership and political class that amending certain provisions of the 1987 constitution would be required to improve the functioning of Haiti's democratic institutions. However, the means by which the process of amendment should be pursued continues to be the subject of debate. A number of interlocutors expressed concern that the electoral calendar places an excessive financial burden and political stress on an already fragile system. Haiti's onerous administrative structure, restrictions on dual nationality and the balance of powers between the executive and legislative branches of Government were also identified as key areas requiring reform.

20. The mission was aware of the tight schedule for constitutional amendments and acknowledged the importance of reforming the Constitution to bring about better governance in the country. In that regard, the mission passed on a message to be pondered by Haitian political leaders on the need to achieve the necessary consensus for the appropriate constitutional reform process. In the meeting with the Chairman of the Presidential Commission on the Constitution, the mission also expressed the need to enhance coordination between the executive branch, Parliament and civil society in order to avoid splits and political paralysis that could hamper the reform process in the country.

21. The Presidential Commission on the Constitution is expected to issue its report in June, with the goal of allowing the legislature time to approve amendments to the Constitution before the end of its session in September. A parliamentary commission on constitutional reform has also been established. If approved, those amendments would need to be ratified by the next legislature and would only enter into effect once a new President takes office in 2011. Some politicians and constitutional experts believe that it will be difficult to keep those deadlines, in particular since the amendment process is contingent upon the fulfilment of the upcoming electoral calendar. It should be noted that the renewal of one third of the Senate in the April and June elections is crucial so that the Senate may vote on constitutional reform, since the Senate is currently operating with a reduced membership that would not allow the two-thirds majority necessary to approve amendments. In that regard, the Senate has not changed its internal rules of procedure to allow a two-thirds majority of the current 18 acting senators.

Extension of State authority

22. The development of legitimate and accountable institutions of Government remains critical to the consolidation of stability in Haiti. Despite MINUSTAH efforts, in collaboration with key partners, to enhance Haitian institutional capacity, both the central Government and local administration continue to suffer from limited capacity to deliver basic services. Health and education are among the areas where the State's capacity to deliver basic services is weakest, as demonstrated by the tragic collapse of the La Promesse Evangelique school in Pétionville near Port-au-Prince, which led to over 100 deaths, many of them children, protracted disputes over payment of salaries to teachers and acrimonious labour actions that have paralysed some hospitals in the capital. The mission noted with concern that the State can provide education to only 10 per cent of registered students, which represents a low percentage of persons of school age, while in addition, the State controls neither the content nor the quality of private education. A number of interlocutors also stressed the need to clarify the legal and practical arrangements for decentralization, which could enhance the ability of local administrations to provide services.

23. President Préval and Prime Minister Pierre-Louis, as well as political leaders, members of the private sector and civil society, emphasized the need for a coordinated effort to enhance governance and administrative capacity at all levels. In that regard, further bilateral efforts will be required to supplement the assistance being provided by MINUSTAH within the framework of a Government plan.

24. The mission was encouraged to learn that following an upgrading of the customs data system, an intensification of road patrolling and the opening of new checkpoints, there has been significant increase in the collection of revenue by customs, which constitutes one third of the State's fiscal resources. The mission was also encouraged by the efforts of the Government of Haiti, with assistance from MINUSTAH, the international financial institutions and donors, to prepare and update a number of key policy texts related to border management, including an integrated border management plan, the Haitian Customs Code and the Law on the National Council of Integrated Border Management.

25. The visit by the mission to Ouanaminthe, on the north-eastern border with the Dominican Republic, provided a stark illustration of the daunting challenges facing the Haitian authorities in the area of border management. The members of the Council noted the permeability of, and free movement in, the border area and noted that little progress has been made on infrastructure. In that regard, the local authorities drew the mission's attention to the fact that despite the support received from MINUSTAH, they lacked the infrastructure and equipment to effectively manage the border with the Dominican Republic and emphasized the need to increase the Haitian National Police presence in the area, which currently stands at only 22 officers, bearing in mind the constraints posed by the lack of infrastructure.

26. The mission visited the MINUSTAH naval base in Fort Liberté established in December 2008 as part of its border management programme. The mission was briefed on the operational plan for maritime daily and night patrols together with MINUSTAH and the Haitian National Police. The patrols are conducted with the active participation of one Uruguayan battalion officer and eight crew members, one United Nations police and one Haitian National Police officer, per patrols of two boats at a time. The mission observed that the naval joint team at Fort Liberté also takes part in a weekly coordinated border patrol by land, sea and air. The mission was also informed that the Government of Haiti is working to make operational the Custom Office in Fort Liberté recently rehabilitated by MINUSTAH.

Rule of law and human rights

27. Enhancement of the Haitian National Police capability remains a key prerequisite to enable Haiti to respond to threats to its own stability without external support. All the mission interlocutors recognized that important steps have been taken towards the professionalization of Haitian National Police officers, the enhancement of the Haitian National Police institutional capacity and the development of key infrastructure. The mission was particularly encouraged by the fact that support provided to the Haitian National Police by MINUSTAH in collaboration with United Nations agencies and key bilateral partners, has boosted public confidence in the Haitian National Police, as demonstrated in a recent public opinion poll, which showed that in 2008, 58 per cent of Haitians considered that there had been a positive change in the Haitian National Police. The fact that the nationwide recruitment process for the twenty-second promotion, which was launched in September 2008, has generated more than 30,000 applications is further proof of the growing stature of the Haitian National Police in the eyes of the Haitian population.

28. The mission was also encouraged to find that following major delays in the recruitment of Haitian National Police cadets in 2008, efforts to train 14,000 active duty officers by 2011, as provided for in the Haitian National Police reform plan, appear to be back on target. In that regard, the members of the mission were informed that the twentieth promotion of the basic Haitian National Police training programme, comprising 702 cadets (86 of whom are female), graduated in February 2009, bringing the total number of active Haitian National Police officers to 9,247. The twenty-first promotion, which comprises a further 483 cadets (104 of whom are female), began training on 31 December 2008 and is scheduled to graduate in the second half of 2009. It is essential that the Haitian authorities continue to prioritize the recruitment process if the targets identified in the Haitian National Police reform plan are to be met within the envisaged time frame.

29. The mission shared the view expressed by several interlocutors that despite the progress made over the past five years, the Haitian National Police still lacks the capacity to address the array of threats to Haiti's stability, including organized crime and drug trafficking, which are among the main threats to Haiti's governance, stability and development. In particular, the Haitian National Police presence along Haiti's land and maritime borders remains minimal, although the mission was informed by the Haitian authorities that plans are in place for the strengthening of the Haitian coast guard.

30. In addition to the valuable support being provided by MINUSTAH and other key partners, the Haitian National Police will require the concerted assistance of actors in the region with the resources and expertise needed to make an impact. In that regard, the establishment of a working group for Latin American coordination and cooperation with the Haitian National Police and the work of the 2x9 Consultative Group, constitute a tangible expression of the continued commitment of Haiti's Latin American partners to the country's long-term stabilization, drawing on their own successful experience in the field of police training and reform. In the light of the politicization that the Haitian National Police has experienced in the past after previous international training efforts, key political actors in Haiti underscored the need for continued and long-term international assistance to the Haitian National Police.

31. The sustainability of Haiti's stability will also depend on the strengthening of the other pillars of the rule-of-law system. The mission found that limited progress has been made towards the achievement of the objectives identified in the national plan for justice reform, including implementation of the three fundamental laws on the independence of the judiciary. In that regard, the inauguration of the School for Magistrates, which was held on 12 March in the presence of the mission, constituted an important step towards the development of a professional and independent judiciary. Nevertheless, the mission noted that further efforts are required to implement the national plan for justice reform, including the establishment of the Superior Council for the Judiciary, which will ultimately play a key role in promoting the professional ethics and performance of the judiciary.

32. The situation within Haiti's prisons, which has received comparatively little attention from bilateral donors, remains a major cause for concern. Extreme overcrowding in inadequate prison facilities is compounded by very high numbers of prisoners in preventive detention. More than 87 per cent of the detainees in the national penitentiary in Port-au-Prince are held in pre-trial detention, as are more than 78 per cent of detainees nationwide. While there has been some progress towards enhancing corrections capacity, drawing on bilateral support, the prison population has continued to expand, and the facilities by the authorities' own estimation are not adapted to democratic norms and to the goal of rehabilitating prisoners. The mission found that a comprehensive approach is required, namely, one that is aimed at improving the functioning of the entire penal chain, including a reduction in the numbers of preventive, pre-trial detentions and an improvement in prison facilities.

33. The Haitian authorities emphasized their commitment to respecting civil and political rights in the country, in particular freedom of expression. The mission expressed concern at the limitations on economic, social and cultural rights in Haiti, a state of affairs that has been aggravated by the humanitarian situation caused by natural phenomena in 2008, the world food crisis and the deterioration of the international economy.

Humanitarian situation

34. The international response to the series of storms and hurricanes that devastated Haiti in 2008, while laudable, has been insufficient to meet the country's urgent humanitarian needs. The 2008 hurricanes contributed to damages worth 15 per cent of Haiti's gross domestic product (GDP) at a time when the Government is facing a 47 per cent decline in budget support. The $127 million flash appeal for immediate humanitarian assistance has only received about half of the funds requested. Given the imminent start of the rainy season in early April, the mission found that there is an urgent requirement to meet outstanding humanitarian needs.

35. Haiti is exceedingly vulnerable to external shocks, in particular extreme weather conditions during the yearly hurricane season. The level of vulnerability is such that even moderate rainfall can have a major humanitarian impact. Council members were able to see first-hand the aftermath of flooding caused by the 2008 hurricanes in the city of Gonaïves. Large portions of the city, with a population of more than 1.5 million people, were covered in more than 1,800,000 cubic metres of mud. In all, 250,000 persons were affected, including a toll of 466 dead in the floods and 235 missing.

36. Because of the danger of flooding and mudslides due to environmental degradation, watershed management and disaster risk reduction are a priority in Haiti. Council members visited a labour-intensive project in Gonaïves aimed at reducing environmental vulnerability through terracing, the construction of small dikes, reshaping of riverbeds and rehabilitating canals. The project, established by the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Food Programme, has contributed to the creation of 21,000 temporary jobs and provided 1,260,000 food rations. Such watershed management projects are key to preventing further environmental degradation and humanitarian disasters, while at the same time helping to repair rundown irrigation systems.

37. Food security continues to be a major concern in the country. Three million people are moderately or extremely food insecure, representing nearly a third of the country's population. There are also isolated pockets of chronic malnutrition affecting 210,000 persons throughout the country. The mission learned about the difficult situation facing Haiti's agricultural sector and received information regarding the scope for its improvement. With more than 60 per cent of the population engaged in farming and livestock activities, Haiti is only able to provide 45 per cent of its food needs. Landholdings are currently small and underproductive, primarily due to reliance on low-yielding seed stocks, scant use of fertilizers, inadequate irrigation and low levels of mechanization. In addition, because of the country's deforestation and vulnerability to weather conditions, productive soil often is degraded. The mission encouraged the Haitian authorities to adopt agricultural policies designed to boost production. Additionally, they urged the Government of Haiti to display its commitment to establish goals that can be attained in reasonable time frames in order to contribute to the stability of the country. With the right choices and policies, agricultural production could be substantially increased on lands already being cultivated and also expanded to new productive lands, thereby helping increase Haiti's food security.

Social and economic development

38. The socio-economic context has deteriorated significantly in the past year, threatening to undermine the gains made in other areas. Haiti is ranked 146th out of 147 countries listed in the Human Development Index. Seventy-eight per cent of the population lives on less than $2 a day, while 54 per cent of the population must survive on less than $1 a day. It was evident to the mission that the current levels of extreme poverty are clearly incompatible with Haiti's long-term stability. Haitian interlocutors emphasized the importance of continuing to work with the international community to implement a strategy for Haiti's reconstruction and development.

39. As President Préval himself pointed out to the mission, impressive strides towards the achievement of macroeconomic stability were made between 2004 and 2007. Inflation was brought down from over 40 per cent to less than 10 per cent. During the same period, Haiti's GDP grew from -3.4 per cent in 2003 to 3.4 per cent in 2007, exceeding population growth for the first time in several years.

40. The combined impact of the global food and fuel crisis, the series of tropical storms and hurricanes and the global economic downturn, however, have gravely undermined the progress achieved in these key areas. According to the post-disaster needs assessment conducted with the assistance of the World Bank, the European Union and the United Nations, the 2008 storms and hurricanes resulted in some $900 million worth of damage, the equivalent of 14.6 per cent of Haiti's GDP. Official estimates indicate that in 2008 GDP growth slowed to 1.3 per cent and became negative in per capita terms after three consecutive years of positive growth. The global financial crisis is likely to bring a further deterioration in the living conditions of many Haitians during the coming year by reducing the scale of remittances from abroad, which, at a scale of $1.4 billion yearly, represent a key source of desperately needed support for many families.

41. The mission recognized the urgent need for physical security to be accompanied by social and economic security if Haiti is to remain on the path to lasting stability and development. In this regard, the mission took note of the fact that the efforts of the Government to meet the country's immediate recovery and reconstruction needs are currently hampered by a $125 million financing gap for the current fiscal year, although Haiti is scheduled to receive some $1.1 billion worth of debt relief in June 2009. Noting that there had been a marked reduction in direct budgetary support to Haiti, President Préval expressed the hope that the Government would receive the needed $125 million at the upcoming high-level donor conference to be convened by the Inter-American Development Bank in Washington, D.C., as well as funding for a number of specific infrastructure projects, including the completion of National Highway 1, the road from Nippes to the coast and the road to Port-de-Paix. The donor conference was viewed as a major opportunity for Haiti to obtain additional funds for its recovery and reconstruction.

42. The need for the Government to take the lead in forging a broad national consensus around a focused plan to promote development, job creation, food security and reverse environmental damage was stressed to the mission repeatedly by Haitian and international interlocutors alike. In this regard, the mission found that there was strong support within the Government, the private sector, the political class and civil society for the report of Paul Collier entitled, "Haiti: from natural catastrophe to economic security", which sets out key elements for a practical agenda for the country's rapid economic transformation, including harnessing the opportunities for rapid job growth in the textile manufacturing industry afforded by the Haitian Hemispheric Opportunity through Partnership Encouragement II Act (HOPE II Act), which provides Haiti with duty-free access to the United States of America for the next 10 years.

43. Regarding current efforts to promote job creation, the mission was pleased to learn from the Prime Minister that a number of important steps are already being taken by the Government, with the support of key international partners to remove the main obstacles to private investment. These include the establishment of an inter-ministerial committee on land management, the drafting of a law on co-ownership and efforts to identify State-owned land that could be made available for the establishment of export zones. In that regard, during its trip to Ouanaminthe, the mission was able to visit one of the two existing export zones in country, which currently employs some 3,000 workers with plans for further expansion in 2009.

44. The mission was also encouraged by the private sector's apparent willingness to work with the Government and the international community to create jobs. At the same time, several business leaders underscored the urgent need to improve the business climate and attract foreign direct investment, which remains critical to Haiti's long-term economic growth and development. Considerable emphasis was placed by the business community on the need to address Haiti's poor image abroad and portray the country in a more favourable light, given the marked improvement in the overall security situation. In that regard, it was recalled that rates of violent crime were actually worse in other countries in the Caribbean region. The mission was also informed that the Presidential Commission on competitiveness is in the process of developing a national plan on competitiveness as well as a number of specific recommendations to the Government in preparation for the upcoming high-level donor conference.

45. Despite these encouraging signs of an emerging consensus on the urgent need to create jobs through a combination of public and private investment, boost agricultural productivity and address the catastrophic state of Haiti's environment, the mission noted that the Government had yet to produce a focused action plan outlining the country's development priorities in the short, medium and long term. The mission was informed that the Government had begun work on a document for the upcoming donor conference, drawing on the country's poverty reduction strategy paper, the post-disaster needs assessment and the report of Mr. Collier, although further efforts would be required to develop a prioritized blueprint for the country's lasting economic recovery, which could serve as the basis for a renewed partnership between Haiti and the international community.

46. The mission noted that the contribution of the diaspora to Haiti's development, which is contingent on pending reforms to the Constitution to allow dual citizenship, must also be reviewed.

Regional cooperation

47. The mission had the opportunity to meet with members of the Core Group and was able to note the decisive role it continues to play in ensuring close coordination between MINUSTAH and the donor and diplomatic communities to enhance the effectiveness of the international community response.

48. The mission recognized the commitment of Latin American countries to assist Haiti in its stabilization, socio-economic growth and regional integration. It is the first time that the region has become fully involved in peacekeeping in Haiti through its contribution of troops and police, and bilateral and multilateral support. In addition, Latin American countries are increasing their participation in police training, drawing on the successful experiences of the region in this domain.

49. The issue of South-South cooperation was raised repeatedly throughout the mission as an area of increasing interest for Haitian authorities. Major Latin American troop contributors to MINUSTAH were particularly involved in specific development projects, with Argentina providing assistance in the field of agriculture, Brazil in the construction of hydroelectric plants and Chile in supporting the education sector. The mission also was able to visit a new heavy-fuel electric power plant in the city of Gonaïves constructed by Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) and operated by technicians from Cuba.

50. The mission was also encouraged by the signs of improved cooperation between Haiti and the Dominican Republic. During February, President Préval signed a decree reactivating the Haitian delegation to the Joint Haitian-Dominican Republic Border Commission. This body was scheduled to meet at the border on 24 March to discuss its future programme of work.

51. The mission noted that the continued engagement of regional and subregional organizations, such as the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community, is important to ensure Haiti's integration into the broader Latin American and Caribbean context and to deepen the engagement of its hemispheric partners.

52. The Haitian authorities stressed the importance of the cooperation received from the countries of other regional groups and the members of the mission emphasized the value of extending it.

III. Observations

Overall security situation

53. Since the deployment of MINUSTAH, there has been an improvement in the overall security situation, as demonstrated by declining crime rates and the public's growing confidence in the Haitian National Police (HNP). However, the gains made on the security front remain fragile due in large part to the poor quality of the living conditions of the majority of the population and underlying political tensions. Physical security must therefore be accompanied by social and economic security if Haiti is to achieve lasting stability. Drug trafficking continues to be a major threat to security. Haiti cannot be left alone to tackle this problem and requires the support of other countries in the region.

Political dialogue and elections

54. Haiti cannot afford another political crisis. The Government and Parliament must cooperate with one another to lay the foundations for Haiti's long-term stability and development. The process of constitutional reform should lead to a proposal that ensures the functioning of institutions and the fostering of social and economic development. At the same time, it is vital that the Government continue to work with political parties, the private sector and civil society to forge a broad consensus on issues of major importance to the country's stability and development. Electoral reform is necessary in order to simplify the electoral system. In turn this would help reduce the financial burden on the Government budget and enhance the country's stability. Every effort should be made to ensure that the electoral process be free, fair and inclusive.

Extension of State authority

55. The control of land and maritime borders in Haiti and the provision of basic services to the population by the Haitian authorities are the two basic aspects for strengthening the extension of State authority. Finding solutions to the common problems of integrated border management and border security, understood broadly as a regional issue, represent a task in which the international community must assist Haiti in solving common problems. Regarding the delivery of basic services, the Government of Haiti is conditioned by its own development; the capacity of a State is fragile when there is not a strong economy present. The Government of Haiti should take full advantage of the international support to build its capacity to deliver the services that its people require.

Rule of law and human rights

56. Progress has been made towards the professionalization of the Haitian National Police, the strengthening of its institutional capacity and the development of infrastructure, with a view to achieving the goals set out in the national Haitian National Police reform plan. The ambitious programme requires the support and cooperation of the international community.

57. The existence of efficient and credible judicial institutions is a prerequisite for strengthening the rule of law in Haiti. There have been some important steps but there are institutional challenges to be tackled. The limited capacity of the judiciary to administer justice quickly has led to a sharp rise in the prison population, which continues to live in overcrowded conditions and whose fundamental rights are being violated. The Government of Haiti must execute the strategic plan for the expansion of the country's penitentiary system and the review of the current situation of prisoners in preventive detention.

Humanitarian situation

58. Haiti is particularly vulnerable when it comes to hurricanes and tropical storms from the Atlantic Ocean. Progress has been made in the area of disaster prevention and risk reduction through ongoing efforts to regulate water basins and the implementation of labour-intensive projects aimed at reducing vulnerability by terracing, constructing small dikes, reconfiguring watercourses and renovating canals. It continues to be essential that the Haitian authorities work closely with the international community to facilitate the flow of necessary assistance to relief, recovery and longer-term reconstruction and development efforts.

59. Food security is still one of the greatest concerns in the country. The difficulties faced by the farming sector in Haiti were illustrated by figures that indicated the low productivity in the sector, which employs more than 50 per cent of the population. In that regard, the adoption of agricultural policies designed to boost productivity is imperative. Additional funding is required to meet the significant humanitarian needs that still exist in Haiti.

Social and economic development

60. Haiti suffered a number of severe setbacks in 2008. While the country faces daunting challenges, there is every reason to be optimistic that Haiti, with the support of its international partners, can recover from the setbacks of the past year. Haiti urgently requires additional international assistance to meet its immediate humanitarian, early recovery and reconstruction needs. The upcoming high-level donor conference in Washington, D.C., will be critical in that regard.

61. At the same time, the donor conference should be seen as an opportunity to forge a renewed partnership between Haiti and the international community, based on a mutual commitment to create jobs, enhance food security, foster economic development, improve the delivery of basic services and restore the environment. Aid alone will be insufficient to place Haiti on the path to economic security. The Government should therefore continue working with the private sector, political parties and civil society to put in place the legislative and regulatory frameworks required to promote private investment and take advantage of the opportunities for rapid job creation provided by the HOPE II Act and other preferential trade agreements. The international community has a clear stake in Haiti's success and will continue to accompany the process of political, economic and social development. While the international community is willing to play a supporting role, the primary responsibility rests first and foremost with the Haitians themselves.

Regional cooperation

62. The Latin America and Caribbean region plays an important role in helping Haiti insert itself fully within its broader regional context. It should be commended for its commitment to support Haiti on its path towards greater security and development.

United Nations role

63. Given the further progress needed before the Haitian National Police is in a position to fully assume its responsibilities, the continued presence of MINUSTAH currently remains essential. The eventual drawdown of MINUSTAH troops and police will need to take place gradually to reflect the progressive strengthening of Haitian institutional capacity and the changing circumstances on the ground. It is also important to strengthen the capacity of the Haitian authorities to ensure socio-economic stability and development for the future of the country and to consider the role of the United Nations in this regard. While the support provided by the United Nations remains critical, the long-term engagement of other bilateral and multilateral partners, including regional organizations, private foundations and non-traditional donors, will be required to ensure that Haiti remains on the path to stability and sustainable development.
