Peacebuilding Commission

Third session

Central African Republic configuration

Draft strategic framework for peacebuilding in the Central African Republic 2009-2011

I. Background

1. At the initiative of the President of the Republic and by letter dated 6 March 2008, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and la Francophonie of the Central African Republic requested the Chair of the Peacebuilding Commission to inscribe the Central African Republic on the Commission's agenda. On 10 April 2008, the request was submitted to the Security Council.

2. The President of the Security Council wrote to the Chair of the Peacebuilding Commission on 30 May 2008 requesting the Commission to prepare recommendations on the situation in the Central African Republic with respect to the following topics: (a) the organization and holding of an inclusive political dialogue; (b) actions on the part of the national authorities and the support of the international community for the development of an effective, responsible and sustainable reform of the national security sector system; (c) the re-establishment of the rule of law, including respect for human rights, and good governance in all regions of the country.

3. The Organizational Committee of the Commission decided, at its sixth meeting on 12 June 2008, to include the Central African Republic on its agenda and elected Ambassador Jan Grauls, the Permanent Representative of Belgium to the United Nations, as Chairperson of the Commission's country-specific configuration on the Central African Republic.

II. Principles and modalities of cooperation

4. The following principles of cooperation are to guide the work of the parties:

(a) National ownership. The importance of national ownership and the principal responsibility of the Government and the people for peacebuilding and the prosperous and democratic development of the Central African Republic;

(b) Partnership and mutual responsibility. Sustainable peacebuilding requires a solid partnership based on mutual respect and responsibility between the Government and the people of the Central African Republic and their international partners;

(c) Methodological approach. The design and implementation of peacebuilding actions should be based on systematic and continuous consultations between the stakeholders;

(d) Inclusive approach. The various stakeholders in the Central African Republic, including civil society, women's organizations, the private sector, political parties, regional organizations, as well as international, regional and subregional institutions and bilateral partners, must play their key roles in peacebuilding;

(e) Sustained commitment. Peacebuilding is a long-term process that requires predictable and sustained commitment on the part of all stakeholders;

(f) Coordination. Activities planned under this strategic framework must build on recent peacebuilding actions and successes, without duplicating existing peacebuilding activities and strategies;

(g) Human rights-based approach. The peacebuilding approach, as well as the programmes it establishes, should be based on the promotion and protection of human rights, which will form an integral part of the implementation of the activities of the three pillars selected.

5. The strategic framework is a document in progress. The priorities and activities selected should be updated regularly as progress is achieved.

6. Biennial reviews of this strategic framework will be held at the country level and will seek to evaluate progress achieved in the various areas of each priority. These reviews should provide the occasion for frank evaluation of the progress achieved, delays and additional efforts required.

III. Context

A. Political and security situation

7. The Central African Republic has been experiencing a multidimensional crisis for the past several decades. The country's socio-political situation can be described as fragile and vulnerable, especially in its State institutions and political processes. The authority of the State is concentrated mainly in the capital, its surroundings and some of the main towns. State services remain rather weak and are virtually absent outside of Bangui. Good governance, respect for human rights, corruption and the effectiveness of public services are the main challenges that the Government is trying to deal with.

8. The vulnerability of the population, especially in conflict zones, affects mainly civilians, in particular women and children. Violence continues in some regions of the north-east of the country, and the rebellion has aggravated the humanitarian situation and led to the displacement of civilians. The situation has been exacerbated by the violence and various atrocities committed by the road blockers (coupeurs de route), the rebel forces. The confrontations between the armed groups and Government forces have led to significant collateral damage suffered by the civilian population, ranging from loss of life to loss of property. The number of citizens fleeing the violence has been estimated at at least 300,000, of whom about 200,000 are internally displaced persons living in deplorable and precarious conditions and about 100,000 are refugees in neighbouring countries (Chad, Cameroon and the Sudan). Women and children have been the main victims of the situation; it is estimated that more than 15 per cent of the women in conflict zones have been the victims of sexual violence. Significant violations of the rights of children have been committed by all parties, including the road blockers (coupeurs de route): armed groups have recruited children and kidnappings of children have occurred frequently, as has sexual violence. The improvement in the security situation in some regions has permitted the return of about 85,000 displaced persons to their homes, although their circumstances remain precarious, despite significant efforts on the part of humanitarian actors.

9. Faced with these significant challenges in the political and security areas, the Government has, with the support of its international partners, tried to deal with the causes of fragility and to strengthen peace and political stability in nearly all regions of the country. The Government is also working to restore basic administrative, economic and social services to meet the essential needs of the people. The elections of 2005 marked the return to constitutional governance. In the past two years, the process aimed at achieving peace and national reconciliation has accelerated and intensified, thanks to the facilitation provided by the Government of Gabon, the United Nations and the International Organization of la Francophonie (OIF), which was aimed at preparing the holding of an inclusive political dialogue in December 2008.

10. The inclusive political dialogue was singled out by the Peacebuilding Commission as a necessary condition without which significant progress could not be achieved in the three key areas selected for peacebuilding.

11. The dialogue was one of the outstanding events of 2008. After several months of preparations under the aegis of a preparatory committee that included representatives of the politico-military movements, the dialogue took place in December 2008 with the participation of representatives of the presidential majority, the democratic opposition, other political parties, civil society, Government authorities and the armed political groups. Representatives of the United Nations and regional and international partners of the Central African Republic also attended. The dialogue provided an occasion for reviewing the main problems that had afflicted the country since independence and for proposing solutions aimed at breaking the cycle of crises that the country had been experiencing for several years. Discussions proceeded in three committees, whose recommendations were submitted and adopted in a plenary session. The committees focused on (a) political matters and governance; (b) the security situation and armed groups; and (c) socio-economic development.

12. The recommendations of the dialogue will have a major impact on political, economic and social life in the coming years, provided that they are effectively implemented. A committee on follow-up to the dialogue was established to coordinate and facilitate the execution of the recommendations, a few of which have already begun to be implemented (such as the appointment of a Government of openness that includes members of the opposition and the armed political groups).

13. Prior to the dialogue, the Government signed a comprehensive peace accord on 21 June 2008 with several key rebel groups. A strengthened law on general amnesty was adopted in September and promulgated in October 2008, and some political prisoners were set free. The amnesty law does not cover crimes that fall within the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court, in particular genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes. The law also protects the right of victims to seek justice.

14. Besides the internal challenges, other potential threats remained, as the Central African Republic was vulnerable to the effects of conflicts in neighbouring countries (Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Sudan and Uganda).

B. Socio-economic situation

15. The Central African Republic is a landlocked country marked by great weakness in its physical infrastructure for internal communication. Despite significant natural resources (sizeable watercourses and forest and mining resources), economic and social indicators are very disturbing. More than two thirds of the population are considered poor (subsisting on less than a dollar per day). This poverty is concentrated in rural areas and continues to deepen and is marked, inter alia, by limited access to basic services and a lack of economic and employment opportunities.

16. The long period of instability that the country has gone through has led to worsening of the main economic and social indicators, some of which have reached extremely critical levels. For example: (a) the gross domestic product (GDP) shrank by an average of 1 per cent per year between 1995 and 2003; (b) life expectancy at birth, which was already low at 49 years in the 1980s, dropped to 41 years in 2003; and (c) the school attendance rate is among the lowest in sub-Saharan Africa.

17. In its economic plan towards the end of the 1990s the Central African Republic tried to break the negative trend in its economic and social indicators. The country's economic performance began to improve, starting in 2004. Real GDP grew by 4.2 per cent in 2007, while exports grew and inflation was controlled. This performance led to a slight improvement in the general situation, allowing for some restoration of macroeconomic balances. It should be noted that significant progress was made towards structural reform, including reforms in the tax administration and customs service and measures aimed at improving governance and transparency. Economic growth reached 3.5 per cent in 2008 but could be affected by the global economic and financial crisis. The situation remains precarious, and tax receipts won't be able to cover the needs of the State with regard to security, the fight against poverty, the regular functioning of Government services and the repayment of debt.

IV. Initiatives under way and analysis of priorities, goals, challenges and threats to peacebuilding

A. Initiatives under way

18. During the Government's study of the problems in 2005, the main challenges that the Republic must deal with during the current stage of post-conflict rebuilding were clearly established, and the strategic directions taken by the Government focused on the following priorities: (a) peacebuilding and the restoration of security, (b) revitalization of the economy, reconstruction of infrastructure and strengthening of the ability of the State to ensure the availability of and access to basic social services and (c) the promotion of human capital.

19. These strategic directions and the programmes they gave rise to were developed mainly within the following conceptual framework:

(a) Poverty reduction strategy paper. A national poverty reduction strategy for 2008-2010 was developed and submitted to donors and international partners in late 2007. The poverty reduction strategy paper sets forth the overall vision of the Government with regard to reducing poverty, which is based on four main pillars: (i) the restoration of security, peacebuilding and conflict prevention; (ii) the promotion of good governance and the rule of law; (iii) economic revitalization and diversification; and (iv) the development of human capital;

(b) Seminar on security sector reform and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. Reform of the security sector is a Government priority. In April 2008 a national seminar was organized to enable a thorough discussion of the reforms needed in the security sector as a whole, including the armed forces of the Republic, the national police, the judicial and penitentiary systems, the intelligence services and private security forces. A detailed action plan for reform was prepared and adopted during the seminar. Bilateral and multilateral partners support the Government in the implementation of the reform. An agreed framework for implementing DDR was developed at Libreville in Gabon on 29 January 2009, followed by the establishment of a steering committee in Bangui on 9 February 2009. A time chart for implementing DDR was developed and is being executed with the assistance of the rebel movements;

(c) Final recommendations of the inclusive political dialogue. The inclusive political dialogue held in December 2008 adopted a series of recommendations in the areas of governance, security and economic recovery. The Government intends to set these recommendations as its road map for its actions during the next few years. A committee to follow up on the inclusive political dialogue has also been established to assist the Government in this task;

(d) The development poles programme. The Central African Government, with the support of the European Commission, has dedicated a major section of its poverty reduction strategy to regional development aimed at revitalizing local economies and restoring the authority of the State. This policy will be implemented in 10 pilot sites with the help of European financial support. Institutionally, the programme is part of the presidency of the Republic. The international machinery builds on a multidisciplinary consultative framework involving many national and international agencies. Certain financial partners have provided support to this initiative, which requires substantial resources in view of the deterioration in physical conditions in rural areas;

(e) United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) and other initiatives supported by the United Nations. The United Nations system has prepared a framework plan for development assistance for the country for 2007-2011, which serves as the basis for the country programmes of the various agencies. This framework plan, which is a contribution by the United Nations system to the poverty reduction strategy paper, has three strategic areas of cooperation: (i) the strengthening of governance and of the respect for human rights, (ii) post-conflict economic recovery and the fight against poverty and (iii) the intensification of the fight against HIV/AIDS. At the level of the United Nations system, the response to the humanitarian appeal will make it possible to contain the humanitarian crises and to favour the recovery of the most affected areas. Interventions by the United Nations system in security sector reform seek to achieve the first target of UNDAF: by 2011, the Central African people will be living in a environment of peace, security and economic prosperity, where human rights are respected; it will participate with equity in the decentralization process and in peacebuilding;

(f) Other initiatives supported by the partners. The bilateral and multilateral partners of the Central African Republic provide significant support in key areas linked to peacebuilding. These initiatives and programmes have been compiled in detail in a document prepared by the Peacebuilding Support Office;

(g) The United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA) continues to support national efforts to achieve national reconciliation, respect for human rights and good democratic governance.

B. Analysis of priorities, goals, difficulties and risks

20. During their consultations in October 2008 in New York, the Peacebuilding Commission and the Central African Government decided on three priority areas, on which they would focus their partnership efforts. These were: (a) security sector reform (including disarmament, demobilization and reintegration); (b) governance and the rule of law; and (c) the development poles.

21. These three priorities are mutually complementary and reinforcing and form a coherent set of interventions aimed at promoting the return of peace and peacebuilding throughout the country. The choice of strategic interventions took into account the priority actions included in the national poverty reduction strategy, the recommendations of the inclusive political dialogue and various programmatic frameworks and programmes that promoted peacebuilding, such as the time chart for reforming the security sector, the documents relating to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, etc.

22. This strategic framework cannot be considered a programme document or a project document. The actions described here are, therefore, to be considered on a strategic level. The priority strategic interventions mentioned in this strategic framework are described in detail in programme documents and the related projects, in particular the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the security sector reform programme; similarly, the development poles concept will be given more concrete form once the regional documents now in preparation are completed.

1. Reform of the security sector and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration

Major challenges, risks and constraints

23. The Central African Republic has been plagued with a lack of security over most of its territory, in particular in the North-West, the North-East and the centre. Banditry and armed political movements have been the cause of the lack of security within the country. Tensions between the Central African Armed Forces, the rebel groups and the population have eroded the confidence of the people in the security and defence forces of the nation. Incursions by armed groups from neighbouring countries, which have been using Central African territory as a rear base or a transit route, have also contributed to the number of violent acts committed on Central African territory. Over a large portion of the country the zaraquinas or road blockers (coupeurs de route) still pose a threat to the people.

24. Unlike the situation in many countries, where the defence and security forces are well staffed, in the Central African Republic the defence and security forces are short staffed and lack adequate training, which means that they can't effectively ensure the protection of citizens and/or national borders. The armed forces are based mainly in Bangui and, given the poor state of roads and security over the entire country, their deployment when needed is slow and meagre. The permanent presence of defence forces throughout the country could help to improve the security situation in the country, as has been shown in the North-East, where violence has been reduced owing to the presence of international missions such as the European Union-led military force in Chad and the Central African Republic (EUFOR) and the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT).

25. However, the risks confronting the security situation remain significant. Despite a noticeable improvement in the security conditions in the country, thanks partly to the calming of the political and military climate after the inclusive political dialogue, a relapse is still possible. These risks are linked mainly to the urgent task of implementing DDR, to the need for a peace dividend resulting in socio-economic calm among the people, to the implementation of the recommendations issued by the inclusive political dialogue and to reforms in the security sector.

26. Security matters are a crucial priority for the Government, which has embarked on a series of significant actions in that field, such as the security sector reform process launched in April 2008 at the national seminar. The seminar, in which all stakeholders participated, prepared a time chart for reforming the security sector, a veritable road map laying out the activities to be undertaken over a period ranging from eight months to two years by the Government, either alone or jointly with its partners. This document serves as a reference for all actions to be undertaken by the international community, including the Peacebuilding Commission in its peacebuilding mission.

27. One of the most urgent and important actions is to develop and implement immediately a programme for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, who are impatiently awaiting the dividends of a fragile peace. Some preliminary steps towards implementing a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme have just been launched by the steering committee. Up to now, the following have been prepared: a road map, a research matrix showing the ratios between the number of weapons and the number of combatants, and the eligibility criteria for former combatants to participate in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. Actions have been launched to raise awareness among former combatants and to identify them. The framework document for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme is now being prepared and will be finalized soon. National actors have made significant progress in a very short period, compared to earlier efforts to accelerate the process, so that it can be completed by May 2009. It is extremely important that all parties respect the road map.

28. Similarly, the deployment of defence and security forces over larger parts of the country is crucial in order to curb the incursions of rebel groups from neighbouring countries and to constrain the road blockers (coupeurs de route). Failure to re-establish security in certain parts of the country will prevent the recovery of local economic activity, which is a key element in the development poles project, which seeks to revitalize secondary centres throughout the country and to restore the authority of the State.

Summary of priority strategic activities to be carried out (see table below)

29. Priority activities are aimed at improving the distribution of national security forces in the country, as well as their training (including in human rights) and their equipment, and ensuring their support. Such action will make it possible for the security forces to ensure the security of citizens and to improve controls at national borders and will be paralleled by strengthening the legislative and regulatory framework so as to achieve better governance in the security sector.

30. Specific measures are also planned for re-establishing confidence between the protagonists in the conflicts and the people, who have been the main victims of various crimes and atrocities and have often been forced into displacement. The successive Governments have already undertaken various actions aimed at strengthening security, peacebuilding and the confidence felt by people in the defence and security forces and Government institutions. These measures include: (a) the organization of the national seminar on reform of the security sector; (b) the establishment of the standing technical secretariat for reform of the security sector, the committee on follow-up to the inclusive political dialogue and the steering committee for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; (c) the adoption of the special status of the police; and (d) the removal of illegal roadblocks.

2. Governance: rule of law

Major challenges, risks and constraints

31. Good governance, the rule of law and the promotion and protection of human rights are key preconditions for stability, reconciliation and peacebuilding. Analysis of the successive crises in the Central African Republic has shown that the crises have been due to weakness in governance, particularly in the management of public finances, corruption, extreme poverty, inequitable distribution of wealth, poor management of human resources, dysfunctionality in the entire security sector and in the justice system, and the climate of violence and instability in the subregion.

32. The major challenges in the specific areas of governance, the rule of law and the promotion and protection of human rights involve:

(a) Democracy and strengthening the institutional and legal framework. The Central African electoral system is not very robust and needs to be strengthened so as to ensure fair and fair competition in a framework of free and transparent elections. Similarly, the drafting, adoption and promulgation of a certain number of laws and regulations are needed in order to strengthen and increase the coherence of the way that the main institutions of the Republic operate;

(b) Reform and modernization of the State, including deconcentration, decentralization and local governance. Despite successive efforts to introduce reform, public administration is marked by various weaknesses, particularly with regard to the respect for certain basic principles such as the assumption of responsibility, accountability, transparency, efficiency and effectiveness, service to citizens, participation and the supremacy of laws. A new professional ethic must be promoted and enforced. Furthermore, despite the priority given to decentralization in public administration, the administrative organization in the Central African Republic is strongly centralized and there is an uneven distribution of public services across the country. Decentralization of State services and the provision of basic services in the interior of the country are key elements for any strengthening of the visibility and legitimacy of the central Government. The provision of services outside the capital would form a useful complement to the planned deployment of defence and security forces throughout the country;

(c) Governance and the fight against corruption (including the management of natural resources, the management of public finances and decentralization). Corruption affects the functioning of the administration in all sectors, especially in financial areas. The Government has just indicated its political will to fight this scourge by establishing a national agency to fight corruption and by initiating the process for joining the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative;

(d) Respect for human rights: Many observers, associations for the defence of human rights and certain political parties have stated that civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights, continue to be a subject of concern in the Central African Republic, despite the existence of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and Good Governance. These concerns have been aroused by violations of human rights committed against the population by rebel movements, by vigilant groups, by the defence and security forces, as well as by bandits and road blockers (coupeurs de route) of all kinds, against which the Government with its limited means has had only little effect. Substantial support from partners could promote the establishment of an environment favouring respect for human rights;

(e) Access to equitable justice and the fight against impunity. Access to justice is a major challenge for building democracy and social peace in the country. In the Central African social and political context, characterized by great instability and deepening poverty, the question of impunity needs to be treated effectively, which would be welcomed by the people and would make it possible to re-establish confidence in the justice system and reduce frustration. Special mention should be made of the need to bring to justice those who have committed various crimes (including sexual violence against women and children);

(f) Promotion of an ongoing dialogue among the actors based on interactive and transparent communication with regard to actions to implement the priorities mentioned above.

33. Marked improvement in good governance, the rule of law and the well-being of the people all across the country would lead to the re-establishment of confidence on the part of the population in institutions and to the strengthening of an environment of peace and national reconciliation.

Summary of priority strategic actions to be carried out (see table below)

34. The inclusive political dialogue held successfully in December 2008 made it possible to lay down the bases for a renewal in national and local governance in the Central African Republic. What is proposed is to establish an environment favouring the organization of credible and transparent elections, to take steps to strengthen and impose better monitoring on institutions, to strengthen the protection of human rights, to promote and strengthen a culture of peace, democracy and national reconciliation, to promote fair justice for all, and to fight against impunity.

3. Development poles

35. The development poles project represents a national strategy aimed at organizing the national economy around regional growth engines that would spread out over a radius of 50 to 100 kilometres; each identified pole will be surrounded by sets of activities aimed at rehabilitating and reconstructing a set of community services. The goal is to support initiatives aimed at restoring administrative services and at favouring improved availability and access on the part of citizens to basic social services and infrastructure. The development poles will also contribute to the return and harmonious reintegration of refugees and displaced persons in their home localities. These initiatives seek to strengthen the contribution of regional economic spaces to the establishment and more equitable distribution of the assets created.

Major challenges, risks and constraints

36. Although it has not been a direct cause of conflict, poverty (afflicting, it is estimated, 67.2 per cent of the population) exacerbates social tensions and contributes to the fragility of peace and social stability in the regions plagued by conflicts. In recent years, socio-economic indicators, already quite low, have continued to worsen, owing mainly to the successive conflicts and crises. The population is waiting impatiently for a peace dividend in the form of improvements in the security situation and their daily living conditions.

37. The State is the main provider of social services to the population. However, the country has long been plagued by the concentration and centralization of basic social and administrative services in Bangui, the main administrative and economic centre of the country.

38. This situation is exacerbated by a lack of economic opportunities, which has put certain secondary towns of the country in an undesired position of neglect, as the State's capacities have been severely reduced by the crises. There is a plan to enable these secondary towns to enjoy basic services, which would promote greater wealth creation and reduce disparities among regions and among towns. The involvement of small communities will help to create a sense of belonging and the chances of success.

39. This element contributes to peacebuilding by satisfying immediate and priority basic needs and by providing greater access to basic social services. It seeks also to restore hope in people and stabilize employment and income opportunities in rural areas.

40. The added value of the development poles project in the framework of peacebuilding can be found in a certain number of priority actions aimed at ensuring people equitable access to good basic social services, at providing support for economic recovery, at promoting income-generating activities and at supporting basic community institutions.

V. Commitments by each party

A. Government

41. The primary responsibility for peacebuilding and overall improvement in the quality of life in the country rests with the Government and people of the Central African Republic. Sustained political will on the part of all stakeholders is essential for peacebuilding. The commitments by the Government, civil society and the Peacebuilding Commission are described in the table below.

B. Peacebuilding Commission

42. In conformity with its mandate, the Peacebuilding Commission, as an intergovernmental body of the United Nations, will support national peacebuilding efforts in the Central African Republic. The Commission therefore pledges to:

(a) Maintain its engagement with the Central African Republic for a period of three years and to review, in consultation with the Government, its engagement after 2011;

(b) Support the Government and the people of the Central African Republic in the implementation and periodic review of the priority actions in this strategic framework;

(c) Advocate for sustained attention and support for the Central African Republic on the part of the international community;

(d) Advocate for and support the integration of a stronger regional and subregional perspective into peacebuilding efforts in the Central African Republic, in collaboration with the relevant regional and subregional organizations, and with neighbouring countries;

(e) Advocate for increased international assistance to the country, and for better management of the country's natural resources with a view to implementing priority peacebuilding activities;

(f) Support national capacity-building for peacebuilding including capacity-building for national and civil society institutions.

43. In order to carry out its mandate, the Peacebuilding Commission will support and facilitate the implementation of efforts being undertaken and planned by the international community to support the Central African Republic, as detailed in the table below.

44. Furthermore, the Commission will closely monitor progress in the implementation of the recommendations of the inclusive political dialogue, and, if necessary, take steps to ensure that the necessary corrective actions are taken by the relevant actors.

45. Given the importance of correctly organizing the proposed priority actions, the Peacebuilding Commission will, in the next six to twelve months, focus particularly on:

1. The reform of the security sector and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process:

- (a) Strengthening coordination between bilateral and multilateral actors involved in implementing the timetable drawn up by the national seminar on security sector reform in April 2008;
- (b) Mobilizing resources for financing the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme.

2. Good governance and the rule of law:

- (a) Supporting efforts to improve the business environment, including providing political and financial support for the Prime Minister's anti-corruption programme;
- (b) Mobilizing, at the request of the national authorities, international assistance for the holding of municipal, legislative and presidential elections in 2010.

3. Development poles:

Mobilizing the necessary support for the establishment of the development poles, as one of the urgent first measures needed to mitigate the impact of the global economic and financial crisis, bearing in mind what can be done in six to twelve months.

46. To the extent possible, deadlines for finalizing proposed actions have been indicated. These deadlines are indicated in the recommendations of the inclusive political dialogue, the programming frameworks (such as the poverty reduction strategy paper), and other programmes (such as the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme).

VI. Monitoring of implementation and progress achieved

47. The priority actions identified in the strategic framework are consistent with strategic directions set forth in the poverty reduction strategy paper and are aimed at supporting Government efforts to rapidly execute the measures recommended by the inclusive political dialogue. The Government of the Central African Republic and the Peacebuilding Commission will conduct biennial reviews with the participation of all stakeholders in the strategic framework. These reviews will be based on the work of the organs of the institutional structure set up to implement, monitor and evaluate the poverty reduction strategy paper. They will be carried out at the national level and should provide the occasion for frank and constructive dialogue between all stakeholders with a view to evaluating joint efforts towards peacebuilding in the country. The reviews will evaluate the actions planned, the commitments undertaken by all stakeholders, the results expected and the stages to be followed to achieve results.

48. Formal reviews will then be held in the framework of the Peacebuilding Commission in New York, with the participation of the main stakeholders of the Central African Republic. The goal of these formal reviews will be: (a) to evaluate the progress achieved in implementing the strategic framework and in peacebuilding in general; (b) to evaluate the implementation of the commitments made by the various parties; (c) to draw the attention of international partners of the Central African Republic to the challenges requiring more sustained attention on their part; (d) to draw the relevant lessons and select best practice; and (e) to update the strategic framework as needed.

49. Regular monitoring and coordination of the implementation of the strategic framework and the preparation of biennial reviews will be facilitated by a national structure based on existing mechanisms.

50. This follow-up and coordination committee will have the following composition:

- Sectoral Committee on governance of the poverty reduction strategy paper (two representatives)
- Sectoral Committee on security sector reform (two representatives)
- Development poles (two representatives)
- Sectoral Committee on basic infrastructure (one representative)
- Sectoral Committee on gender (one representative)
- Ministry of Communication, Reconciliation and Follow-up to the inclusive political dialogue (one representative)
- Ministry of Planning (one representative)
- Civil society (two representatives)
- Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations
- A representative of the technical and financial partners
- A representative for national defence.
