On 8 January, the Council was briefed by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, António Guterres, on the situation of refugees and internally displaced people.

The High Commissioner commented on recent trends in forced displacement. He said that forced displacement was often the result of threats to international peace and security. He presented three challenges for the international community, namely, the role of peacekeeping in the protection of civilians, the concurrent needs to ensure staff security and to deliver humanitarian protection and assistance, and the difficulty of preserving humanitarian space in the context of an integrated United Nations presence.

Council members welcomed the briefing by the High Commissioner and expressed the wish to increase the frequency of such briefings.

Protection of civilians

On 22 January, at the French Mission, Council members held an informal seminar on peacekeeping operations, chaired jointly by France and the United Kingdom. The former Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno; the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Alain Le Roy; the Under-Secretary-General for Field Support, Susanna Malcorra; the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Edmond Mulet; the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Liberia and Head of the United Nations Mission in Liberia, Ellen Margrethe Løj; and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti and Head of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, Hédi Annabi, were present, as were the academics Colin Keating and Bruce Jones.

The discussion, for which a joint Franco-British non-paper had provided background, focused on the current challenges to peacekeeping operations, and on a proposal for a method to address them in the Council. Three broad series of issues were identified: effective strategic oversight, resource constraints, and lessons learned from implementation. France and the United Kingdom proposed to address them as a priority in the coming months, in close contact with the Secretariat and the main stakeholders, and to take stock of progress by August 2009.

On 23 January, a debate of the Council was organized on the same issue. In addition to Council members, speakers included the Under-Secretaries-General for Peacekeeping Operations and Field Support, the Special Representative for Haiti, representatives of major troop contributors across geographic regions (Pakistan, India, Jordan, Uruguay), and representatives of regional organizations (European Union and African Union) and of the Non-Aligned Movement.

The participants welcomed the Franco-British initiative to address the challenges of peacekeeping. In addition to issues already raised on 22 January, they stressed, in particular, the need to reinforce dialogue among the main actors, particularly with troop-contributing countries, at all stages of the preparation, conduct and evaluation of operations.
